

Ezra Keenan Wijaya

Life Community School, BEAC03

Poetry Writing U16

A Man of Hell and a Man of Heaven

Through the gates of hellfire is a man of hell due,
A life of cruelty he has stirred up.
Plots of evil as many as morning dew,
He holds the wrath of God in a cup.
Seeing nothing is all he views now,
The blaze of judgment reigns over him.
For temptation in his life did he allow,
Through the gates of hellfire is a man of hell grim.

A wonderful life did a man of heaven live,
The life that he had was filled with peace.
A man of good who will always forgive,
The life which he made was God's masterpiece.
Through the gates of splendor will he pass into,
Living a perfect paradise of eternal life.
To God's eternal embrace he ran to,
A good man of heaven lives without strife.

Though they both must die in the earth,

One suffers in hell's darkest depth.

A man of heaven will find rebirth,

A man of hell will repeat death.

So lies a choice, the holy or profane?

A choice one must never take in vain.

A man of heaven who lives in paradise?

Or a man of hell who the devil shall jeopardize?