

"Me and God" — An Expressive Reflection

By jonathan Tavui

When I stand still and silence wraps around me, I feel something greater stirring within—not outside, not far, but close,
like the soft breath between heartbeats.
That's where God is.

It isn't thunder or fire,
though sometimes He shakes the ground in my life
so I remember who holds the sky.
Sometimes He's the quiet whisper that tells me I'm still loved, even when I'm broken.

There are days I question,
days I doubt if He still walks beside me.
And yet—He answers, not with words,
but with peace I can't explain,
with light that leaks into the cracks of my fear.

I fall, I rise, I wander, I return.
And God—He waits.
Patient as time itself,
gentle as mercy,
constant as breath.

This journey between me and God is not perfect,
but it's real.
It's a conversation that never ends,
a love that doesn't need proof,
a bond that even silence cannot break.

So I walk on,
sometimes praying, sometimes listening,
always searching, always found.
Because in every step,
it's never just me—
it's me and God,
and that
is enough.
