

Living Water

My soul wandered through deserts of borrowed light,

Chasing rivers that vanished before the dawn.

Every cup I raised left my spirit dry,

Until Your mercy found where I had fallen.

You knelt beside the dust I called my home,

And washed the weight I could not cleanse alone.

No longer thirsting for the world's applause,

I drink the grace that flowed from Calvary's cross.

Now let my heart become a humble stream,

Refreshing every soul too weak to dream.

When trials return like an endless sea,

Your Word remains the well that carries me.

For only Christ can heal what time cannot,

The Living Water I shall thirst no more.
