

The Prodigal and the Road to Egypt

Poetry Recitation – Sisa Vakalalavanua

The Prodigal was a restless man
Who turned aside from God's best plan
To walk the road of fleshly pleasure
Squandering his inherited treasure

He spent freely on all his friends
Until his money came to an end
By following plans of his own design
He found himself a herder of swine

Dirty, dusty, hungry and hot
He realized now that he was not
Living the truths his father taught
But a victim of Satan's devious plot

"My father's servants live better than me

I will go home a servant to be

I will seek my father's favor

Then as a servant, faithfully labor."

The father in love watched from afar
For His son who followed the wandering star
He ran to meet him with warm embrace
Extending his love and healing grace

If you have been down the Egyptian Road
Heed the truth the Scripture has told
Come bow your head and bend your knee
To the only One who can set you free

Remember the faithfulness of your God
Forsake this path upon which you trod
Return to the One whose love is true
He will restore the joy you once knew

Come to the altar of surrender
Admit you are a spiritual pretender
Today if you hear the Spirit call
Come kneel before God; give Him your all
