

WEDNESDAY

SCENE ONE

Billie is folding clothes while Paisley is testing Bailey on her lines for a play she's in. Hazel enters dramatically. Paisley and Bailey are sitting down.

Hazel: Guys.

Billie: Don't say it. Don't even think about saying it.

Hazel: I have nothing to wear!

Billie: And she says it. Here we go again.

Hazel: I'm serious this time.

Billie: No, you're not serious. You obviously have clothes. You just choose not to wear them.

Hazel: Don't be gross.

Billie: That's not what I meant.

Paisley: We're not going anywhere.

Hazel: I'm getting ready for Stephanie's on Saturday.

Paisley: Saturday is . . . (silently counts on her fingers) three days away.

Hazel: Well, you know what they say; no time like the current.

Bailey: Err . . .

Hazel: (turns to Billie) What are you doing?

Billie: What does it look like I'm doing?

Hazel: Well, folding clothes, it just doesn't seem right. Too much of a natural phenomenon.

Bailey: Mum told her to clean her room. (to Paisley) Next line?

Paisley: But Mum's in Africa. How does she know that Billie's room is messy?

Bailey: But Mum's in Africa. How does she know that Billie's room is messy?

Paisley: Oh, no, no. No, that's not the line.

Billie: I think Mum knows me well enough to know that I know that there's no point in cleaning my room when she's away. That was a mouthful.

Bailey: Can I have the next line?

Paisley: That is true.

Bailey: That is true. (Paisley looks at her in confusion)

Billie: The fact that I think Mum knows me well enough to know that I know that's there's no point in cleaning my room when she's away?

Paisley: Oh, no, no. No, the mouthful.

Billie: Sure wish I had a mouthful of pizza.

Bailey: Get over it. You can't drive so you can't go. End of story.

Billie: Start of story. I could've walked!

Paisley: Okay, your next line is—hang on, what did you just say?

Bailey: Not 5ks you can't! (to Paisley) Please concentrate! This is important!

Hazel: (singing) Please concentrate! Please concentrate! This is important!

Billie: Why? Just why?

Paisley: Oh my goodness gracious me! This should have been a musical!

Bailey: Well, it's not. So give me the next line.

Hazel: Can we please deal with the elephant in the room?

Billie: (elephant noise while pretending her arm is a trunk)

Hazel: Not that elephant, you elephant!

Billie: (scoffs repeatedly)

Hazel: The matter of the fact is—

Bailey: Isn't it the fact of the matter?

Hazel: (puts up her hand to silence Bailey) I'm having a moment. The matter of the fact is that I have nothing to wear.

Billie: (sing-song) (American accent) Lord, give me strength. (mimics a guitar and guitar noise)

Paisley: (fist to her heart) (American accent) Amen, sister.

Hazel: Why? Just why? And aren't you meant to be . . . how do I say this tactfully . . . aren't you meant to be depressed?

Bailey: Hazel! That was the definition of un-tactfulness.

Paisley: (stands up) (clears her throat) I . . . am a survivor . . . of depression. Yesterday, I was young . . . and naïve. But I have matured immensely in the last . . . (silently counts on her fingers) eleven hours. And now I am taking yet another step in the direction of joy and fulfilment and purpose and life.

Bailey claps politely. Hazel claps normally. Billie claps obnoxiously, cheering.

Billie: Brava! Brava! Standing ovation. (to Bailey) Get up. Get up. (to Paisley) What an inspiration! To us all!

Bailey: Okay, calm down, calm down. (Billie continues) Calm down!

Hazel: Okay, back to the elephant. As I was saying, the matter of the fact is that I have—

Billie: Nothing to wear. Story of your life.

Bailey: It's "tomorrow, my dear, tomorrow," right?

Paisley: You've already said that.

Bailey: Give me a clue?

Paisley: I . . . don't . . . need—

Bailey: Oh! I don't need Mr. Tibblewinkle to—

Billie: Ha! Tibblewinkle! Who made that up?

Bailey: Shakespeare.

Hazel: You're kidding.

Billie: No he did not.

Hazel: Bailey, can you help me?

Bailey: What is it?

Hazel: I have—

Billie, Paisley, Bailey: Nothing to wear?

Hazel: Ugh! You're all hopeless.

Billie: Maybe you're the one who's hopeless.

Hazel: Don't vex me.

Billie: 'Vex' isn't a real word. Dumb-head. (shakes her head in disbelief)

Bailey: Hazel, I feel like we've had this conversation too many times in the past week.

Hazel: We have not talked about my clothes for a very long time.

Paisley: What do you call a long time? Cause for a mosquito, two minutes is a very long time, because they're so surprised that they're not dead yet. But for an elephant (gesturing to Billie), they could be fifty-nine hundred years old and still have another fifty-nine hundred years to live until death.

Bailey: Imagine being fifty-nine hundred years old.

Billie: My life purpose is to kill mosquitoes.

Bailey: That's a good life purpose. I will support you on that.

Billie: Thank you. That means a lot.

Hazel: (to Paisley) Are you calling me a mosquito?

Billie: She called me an elephant. You called me an elephant.

Hazel: (pointing her finger at Billie) Don't point fingers.

Bailey: I think my life purpose is to be an actress.

Billie: You'd be a good actor.

Paisley: Actress.

Billie: Actor. Actress. Same thing. Just different spelling.

Paisley: One's a male, and one's a female. So, if you're implying that—

Billie: Stop talking.

Bailey: Just to clarify, I am fully female. 100%.

Hazel: Good to know. Should I wear my purple overalls?

Billie: Why do you own purple overalls?

Hazel: They were a gift!

Billie: From who? Who in their right mind would buy that?

Hazel: It's, uh, hard to say. My memory's not actually, like, that great.

Bailey: Didn't you memorize the whole of 1st John? Just to prove a point?

Hazel: That's irrelevant. But true.

Billie: You bought them, didn't you?

Hazel: No comment. Actually, yes comment, uh, we all make mistakes. Such as this (holds up Billie's shirt) hideous item of clothing consisting of 85% cotton and 15% polyester.

Bailey: No way you knew that.

Hazel: I read it off the tag. But my point still stands strong.

Paisley: Well, what's my purpose?

Bailey: Well, what do you like doing?

Paisley: I don't know.

Hazel: It usually helps to be good at something to determine what your purpose is.

Paisley, Bailey: Hazel!

Billie: Hazel!

Bailey: I think you're good at . . . I think you're good at a lot of things.

Paisley: Like what? Not pretty, act depressed half the time, have three loser sisters who follow me around acting like anti-depressants that tag along on my busy social life. (flicks her hair)

Billie: How many people did you just offend?

Paisley: (silently counts on her fingers) Everyone in this room.

Billie: You know, I could have actually had a very sociable outing today.

Bailey: GET. OVER. IT.

Hazel: And 'sociable' isn't a word.

Billie: Well, you said 'vex'.

Paisley: Bailey, be serious. What is my life purpose?

Bailey: You know, you don't actually have to know your life purpose.

Paisley: But I do have a life purpose, right?

Bailey: Of course. It just hasn't been made clear to you yet.

Billie: Since when were you an eighty-five-year-old woman?

Hazel: (to Bailey) Since when were you her counsellor? (beat) Maybe that's your life purpose, Bails.

Billie: (excited) Being an eighty-five-year-old woman! Good on you, Bails! (slaps Bailey on the arm)

Bailey grunts in pain.

Hazel: No! Being a counsellor.

Bailey: Too boring. All you do is sort random people's problems out.

Billie: How is that boring? You get to listen to everyone's deep, dark, don't-want-to-tell-anyone problems.

Hazel: That would suck.

Billie: To tell someone about your deep, dark, don't-want-to-tell-anyone problems?

Hazel: No! Being a counsellor!

Billie: Hey, remember that counsellor that came to Uncle Brent's wedding? And he was—

Bailey: He was trying to get more clients!

Paisley: And he asked Mum if she needed counselling.

Billie: Ha! I remember that.

Bailey: I had seven of those really big doughnuts—you know, the ones with the powder and the cream?

Billie: (scoffs) Did not.

Bailey: I did so have seven.

Billie: I really doubt that.

Bailey: I HAD SEVEN.

Billie: Okay. Whatever you say.

Paisley: Oh my giddy-aunt you guys, don't lose your pizza bread.

Billie: Great. Thanks. Now I'm thinking about pizza.

Hazel: Stop, Billie, you're being unreasonable.

Billie: (mockingly) Don't point fingers.

Hazel: Ugh. Bailey, tell her off.

Bailey: Off.

Hazel: You know what? You're all being unreasonable. (stomps out of the room)

Paisley: What did I do?

Billie: You just . . . you just sat there.

Hazel: (offstage) Argh!

SCENE TWO

Hazel: (walks back into the room) I remember what I came in here for.

Billie: I thought you were mad.

Hazel: I'm not mad!

Billie: Okay. You sound mad.

Bailey: Billie, stop testing your luck. Soon you'll have all of us mad at you.

Billie: What? What did I do?

Paisley: You just . . . you just sat there.

Billie: That is not true. I have had quite a productive morning, thank you very much.

Hazel: A productive morning folding clothes?

Billie: Precisely.

Bailey: Okay, Pais, what's the next line?

Hazel: Bailey, I'm thinking the orange skivvy.

Paisley: But Mr. Tibblewinkle, you can't!

Billie: Orange skivvy? Who were you when you bought these things?

Bailey: So am I saying that, or was that what Molly just said?

Hazel: That was my I-want-to-be-in-the-spotlight-and-looked-at-by-everybody phase.

Billie: O . . . kay.

Paisley: I think I want to be an athlete.

Billie: Pft. I'm sorry. Are you . . . are you serious? Or are you just trying to be mentally insane?

Paisley: Look. I have determination. I have perseverance. I have skill.

Billie: Not for athleticismmismismism you don't.

Hazel: Excuse me? Athleticmismismism?

Billie: You know you actually have to be really, really, really good at athlete stuff to be an athlete. You can't just have determination and perseverance and what was the other thing?

Paisley: Skill?

Bailey: You can be an athlete if you want to be, Paisley.

Paisley: Thank you.

Billie: But it'll be your funeral.

Paisley: What's that supposed to mean?

Hazel: What about you, Billie? You seem to be all talk and no action.

Billie: What?

Hazel: What do you want to be?

Billie: Dunno. I'll figure it out when I'm out in the world.

Bailey: That's one way to look at it.

Hazel: How do you know that's going to work?

Billie: I don't.

Paisley: Then how are you so fine with it?

Billie: Cause what's the point in worrying when I could just . . . not worry?

Bailey: That's actually very wise.

Billie: Is it? Or is it just common sense?

Bailey: I think it's wise.

Billie: Well, I am a very wise person. I mean, just look at me in all my splendour.

Hazel: Don't toot your own horn.

Billie pretends to blow a trumpet.

Bailey: I guess it doesn't really matter what becomes of us in the future, because we all know where we're going after all of this.

(beat)

Paisley: Why so deep?

Billie: Why so depressing?

Hazel: Why so contradictory?

Bailey: It's true, though. We all know—well, I hope we all know—where we are going when we die.

Billie: Let's not talk about death.

Paisley: I do get your point though, Bails.

Billie: That's why the Bible says not to worry.

Everyone looks at Billie like she's crazy.

Bailey: Since when do you read the Bible?

Billie: What? All the time.

Hazel: Like when?

Billie: Not saying.

Paisley: Why aren't you saying?

Billie: Because it's weird.

Bailey: Oh, just say it.

Billie: (mumbles) On the toilet.

Hazel: What?

Billie: (mumbles) On the toilet.

Bailey: Speak up already.

Billie: (mumbles) On the toilet.

Hazel: Just say it!

Billie: On the toilet!

Everyone looks at Billie like she's crazy.

Hazel: Gross.

Billie: It's amazing how much time you have.

Paisley: (repeating) Shoosh.

Bailey: No wonder you take so long.

Billie: Don't judge.

Hazel: Okay, I'm going shopping. See ya.

Paisley: Bye.

Bailey: Be back before dinner.

Billie: Hey, why is Hazel allowed going shopping, but I can't go to a party?

Bailey: Billie, I'm losing the will to live.

Hazel leaves.

Paisley: Hey, do you think shopping is Hazel's life purpose?

Billie: Shopping can't be a life purpose. Dumb-head. (shakes her head in disbelief)

Paisley: Okay, I want some food. Be back soon.

Paisley leaves.

Billie: Bailey, can shopping be a life purpose?

Bailey shrugs.
